DISCLOSURE TITLE: Maximizing Geographic Information System Statistics Readability in a Busine Graphic Environment

PUBLICATION-DATA:
IBM Technical Disclosure Bulletin, April 1994, US

VOLUME NUMBER: 37
ISSUE NUMBER: 4A
PAGE NUMBER: 39 - 40

PUBLICATION-DATE: April 1, 1994 (19940401)

CROSS REFERENCE: 0018-8689-37-4A-39

DISCLOSURE TEXT:

A method to effectively represent statistics from a Geographic Information System (GIS) produ in an office automation environment is disclosed. These statistics are displayed via business graphics. - Merging spatial and attribute GIS data into an efficient format in an office automation environment can be accomplished by using the following steps which show the extensions and enhancements beyond conventional manual techniques: 1. Within the GIS product, macro can be built to issue spatial/attribute statistics commands. This can be done in a typical GIS macro language, via a button or pulldown interface built in the Graphical User Interface (GUI) of the GIS, or built by the user in another GUI. Additionally, it would be desirable to add the capability for the user to select the type of GIS statistics (attribute spatial) and incorporate it into the GUI. 2. Output from the above macro is re-directed to a file preferably in a UNIX* /tmp filesystem. The file naming and protection conventions should follow a protocol specific to the user to avoid overlap with concurrent sessions. Also, note that the output file can be retrieved from the GIS either locally or remotely depending on th network system and locations of needed applications on UNIX machines. 3. The spatial/attribut statistics file which is an ASCII file can now be processed appropriately. The data is arrang according to desired input for spreadsheet importation probably via a specified delimiter and by using typical UNIX file manipulation commands such as "awk" or "sed". Note that the processing, storing, and transferring of the ASCII file can be accomplished through UNIX shel scripts. 4. The GUI for the system (such as a desktop application) can be used to initiate th spreadsheet and, via customized buttons or pulldowns in the GUI of the spreadsheet, the flat ASCII statistics file can be imported into the desired cells of the spreadsheet. It is also desirable to use the macro language of the GIS product to access the business graphics produc directly. 5. Spreadsheet output is used to produce the desired business graphics output such bar, line or pie charts. Templates for desired business graphics outputs can be assembled to further enhance the readability of the graphics by setting appropriate fonts, colors, interva and titles. - At this point, the GIS spatial and attribute statistics have been successfully merged into a business graphics environment for more efficient interpretation of the data. Th implementation is an approach to adding value to the standard spatial and attribute data statistics that GIS products typically produce by merging them into an office automation environment. * Trademark of UNIX Systems Laboratories, Inc.
